HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM SINCE INCEPTION AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

U.S. small/mid-cap growth stocks experienced notable volatility from mid-2024 through early 2025, driven by a sharp rotation into value, persistent macroeconomic pressures, and heightened geopolitical tensions. Despite these challenges, the Russell 2500® Growth Index delivered a +12.27% cumulative return from August 5, 2024 through June 30, 2025*, as improving sentiment in Q2 helped shift market focus back to company fundamentals. This environment played to Hood River’s strengths — namely, a bottom-up, research-driven approach aimed at identifying mispriced opportunities while seeking to mitigate downside risk. With fundamentals once again taking center stage, our portfolio was well positioned, resulting in a +38.20% cumulative return for the Hood River New Opportunities Fund Retirement Share Class (HRNRX) over the same period.

WHAT FACTORS INFLUENCED PERFORMANCE

The Fund’s outperformance since inception was driven primarily by strong stock selection. Key contributors included positions in the information technology, financials and industrials sectors, while energy, healthcare and materials modestly detracted from relative performance.

Through it all, our investment philosophy and disciplined process remain our foundation. We continue to rely on a bottom-up approach to identify companies with durable, long-term earnings growth. While market dislocations may obscure fundamentals in the short term, they tend to reassert themselves just as swiftly. We believe our edge lies in remaining true to our process and staying alert to the best opportunities in the most inefficient segments of the market.
